Here is the description of the author's presentation at the International Montessori Congress 2013: "International Montessori advocate, AMI diploma holder at the 03, 36, and 612 levels, artist and author, Susan Mayclin Stephenson, shares what she has learned and taught in her travels including observations from the USA, Bhutan, India, Nepal, Sweden, and Russia. Experiences from a lifetime of Montessori work and some insights into childhood and the universal child. Biographie de l'auteur (www.susanart.net) In 1963-1964, as a college sophomore, I traveled on the first shipboard university through Europe, the Middle East, and Asia. One of the electives I choose was the study of family life and the raising of children in these parts of the world. For 50 years now I have found this subject one of the most fascinating, and surely one of the most important, that I have ever encountered, and I feel as though I am just beginning to unravel the mysteries of growing up human. So please do not take the ideas presented here as a final word on the subject. On these pages I will attempt to demonstrate that children all over the world have the same needs in order to thrive, and that these needs are inherent and have been universally observed. Also, since I am often asked for suggestions on how others can share Montessori as I do both at home and abroad, I will explain some of the things I have learned about teaching others parents, educators, anyone interested about Montessori. I am grateful that so many people have asked for my Montessori congress presentation to be shared in some form. And I hope that this little publication will benefit you in some way on your life path.
